Picture this 2 teenagers laughing their butts off as we bump along a track mud flying in all directions and all over the car, we hit an unseen rut and are briefly airborne making the kids laugh more, before bouncing back to earth the car not skipping a beat and powering on through the slush.

That is the time I finally got what the Holden Colorado 7 LTZ was totally all about, this is rough tough 4wd vehicle and that's how it's meant to be used.

There are too many people in Australia who stupidly think proper 4wd vehicles should be doomed to the life of the family hack driven between home and school, not taken out of the city let alone taken off-road like they were intended to be used.
